Beta Sports

Super Smash Ultimate Championship I (series 1)

General Tournament Outline –

Singles (no teams), single elimination, 1 match total loss disqualification with the opportunity to purchase a second life. For those who purchase a second life, double elimination, 2 match total loss disqualification. No contestants will be allowed more than two life's with the exception of potential life prize giveaways. No contestant will be allowed to win more than one life prize giveaway.

There are tentative plans for a digital leaderboard so contestant and match progress can be easily referenced throughout the event.

Matches will be played in rounds until every contestant within the round has had a chance to compete. Once one round is over, the next round will begin. Depending on how many contestants purchase extra life's, the extra life contestants may have their own round. Contestant order will be chosen at random, first come, first serve, alphabetically or any other fashion at the sole discretion of Beta Sports. Once Beta Sports makes a final decision on the order of contestants or any other un answered metric here, it will be promptly updated. Subscribe to our email list or follow us an any one of our social media links in order to stay up to date on the latest tournament info.

As a contestant, you will be called to your station once it is time for your match. Unless you are playing a match, you are free to watch the other contestants play from a respectful distance during the tournament. There will also be plenty of other activities and games throughout the event so it will be difficult to be idle.

As a contestant you need to be comfortable playing with a lot of noise and distraction. This is not a golf tournament. We're gearing our ambience towards lively crowd interactions. While we encourage a lively attitude, make sure all your interaction conform to the Beta Sports Terms and Code of Conduct found on the registration page of the Beta Sports website (www.betasports.net).

More updates to come! Stay tuned!
